THE FREDDY SCHREIBER MEMORIAL PFUNNY NAMES LIST

(The “p” is silent, as in swimming)

Freddy Schreiber was a brilliant young jazz bassist from Seattle. Freddy suffered from severe spinal scoliosis which resulted in internal cancer that led to his death at age 30. In his last years he played, toured, and recorded with Cal Tjader. In addition to his bassistic virtuosity, Freddie was much admired—loved, really—for his irrepressible wit.

In the early ‘60s Freddy wrote a letter to Downbeat magazine satirizing over-intellectualizing jazz critics by, among other put-ons, characterizing a bassist’s work as exhibiting a “relentless throbbing beat” and “angular probing lines”. In another letter, he described the jazz musician’s life using several invented names like his road manager “Arturo Versees”. This issue of Downbeat was received with great hilarity in the Seattle jazz community and led to a competitive fad among its members to outdo Freddy in inventing “pfunny” names (also known as “aptonyms”, according to Seattle trombonist Dave Tuttle). Just as in jazz improvisations, a certain loose, unarticulated set of rules determined includability in the canon. Good taste and precise pronunciation were not among them. Before long, the number of fictitious names proliferated to the point where many of us started making lists so that these gems of antic creativity could be preserved for posterity. The following is my up-dated contribution.

The radio comedians Bob & Ray pre-dated Freddie in the employment of this trope. Their inventions are indicated with a double asterisk, where Freddie’s are followed with a single asterisk. I have also included most of NPR’s Car Guys oeuvre.

Enjoy. Also, feel free to add your own wig-bubbles. One note of caution, however: “Ima” is not a legitimate first name. The prospect of its potential proliferation gives me the Willies.
